MORE than two million soldiers camped on the edge of Winchester on their way to fight in the Great War, a new exhibition shows.

The vast camps at Morn Hill were visited three times by King George V, yet a promise to create a memorial to the troops who passed through en route to the Western Front was never kept.

Now, nearly a century on, an exhibition has opened, telling the story of the forgotten soldiers and the vital role played by the city.

The exhibition in the Discovery Centre includes old photos of soldiers marching through the city, uniforms, postcards, letters and other memorabilia. For full story, read this week's Hampshire Chronicle, on sale now.
